
A small change at the bias produces a large change in the effect. That is why the same event lands differently on two people — and why the bias, not the cause, is where the leverage is.